A Public Letter.

To Editor Marshall Republican:—
Will you kindly inform us through your paper if we have any money on hand for the repairing of large bridges such as those across Blackwater and Finis Creek. Our bridge across Finis Creek, just south of Blue Lick has been out of commission for a long time and we don't wish to find fault or criticize any one until we know beyond any guess whose fault it is that this bridge is not repaired and if we haven't any money of course the bridge commissioner can not do anything. If you find we have no funds for such work then we suggest to the honorable county court or the bridge commissioner that they set aside or hold in reserve from year to year as much road revenue as in the judgment of the commissioner would be sufficient for just such repair work or we as tax payers can't see any good reason for keeping a county engineer if we haven't any money for him to work with. On the other hand if you find we have money on hand for such work then there is a gross neglect on the part of some of our road officials in respect to this particular bridge and we think the thing to do would be to do just the same as any good physician would do if he was called in to see a sick person with some contagious disease and you know the first thing he would do would be to make a thorough and careful examination of his patient and then he would prescribe accordingly one of the strongest medicines to remove the cause. F. W. York.

We were informed at the county clerk's office that repairs had been ordered for all bridges recommended by the highway engineer.—Editor.

DICKENS AS HE WAS IN 1839

Interesting Description of Great Writer Published in the Knickerbocker of That Year.

In person he is a little above the standard height, though not tall. His figure is slight, without being meagre, and is well proportioned. The face, that first object of physical interest, is peculiar, though not remarkable. An ample forehead is displayed under a quantity of light hair, worn in a mass on one side rather jauntily, and this is the only semblance of dandyism in his appearance. His brow is marked, and his eye, though not large, is bright and expressive. The most regular feature is the nose, which may be called handsome; an epithet not applicable to his lips, which are too large. Taken altogether, the countenance, which is pale without sickliness, is in repose extremely agreeable and indicative of great refinement and intelligence.

Mr. Dickens' manners and conversation, except perhaps in the perfect abandon among his familiars, have no exhibition of particular wit, much less of humor. He is mild in the tones of his voice, and quiescent, evincing habitual attention to etiquette and the conventionalisms of polished circles. His society is much sought after, and, possibly to avoid the invitations pressed upon him, he does not reside in London, but with a lovely wife and two charming children occupies a retreat in the vicinity. He is about 25 years of age, but does not look more than 23 or 24. Mr. Dickens is entirely self-made, and rose from an humble station by virtue of his moral worth, his genius and his industry.—From the Knickerbocker, August, 1839.

CROWDING TO SEE TENNYSON

Congregation Would Not Leave Westminster Abbey Without a Glimpse of the Great Poet.

Sir James Knowles accompanied Alfred Tennyson to the funeral of Dickens at Westminster abbey and he describes in "Tennyson and His Friends" the scene when the crowd identified the distinguished visitor. "There was an immense congregation that day in the abbey and when the service was over we stood up waiting a long time to pass out through the rails. But instead of dispersing by the outer door the people all turned eastward and flocked toward the altar, pressing closer and closer up to the sacristum. The chances of getting out became less and less, and I turned to Tennyson and said: 'I don't know what all this means, but we seem so hemmed in that it is useless to move yet.'"

"Then a man standing by me whispered: 'I don't think they will go, sir, so long as your friend stands there.' Of course I saw at once what was happening—I had got to be known that Tennyson was present and the solid throng was bent on seeing him. Such a popularity had never occurred to me or to him, and justified his nervous unwillingness to be seen in crowded places."

"I was obliged to tell him what was going on, upon which he urgently insisted on being let out some quiet way and putting an end to the dilemma."

Blunders of Royal Authors.
Royal authors sometimes need a deal of editing. A glaring instance is Frederick the Great, whose spelling and punctuation astounded Carlyle, says the London Chronicle. "A steure" for "a cete heure" was a specimen of the former, "and as for punctuation, he never could understand the mystery of it; he merely scattered a few commas and dashes as if they were shaken out of a pepper box upon his page and so leaves it."

How, asks Carlyle, can such slovenliness be explained in a king who "would have ordered arrest for the smallest speck of mud on a man's buff belt, indignant that any pipe clayed portion of a man should not be perfectly pipe clayed?" He can only conclude that Frederick really cared little about literature after all. Also "he never minded snuff upon his own chin, not even upon his waistcoat and breeches." "I am a king and above grammar," said another monarch.

Man Converses With Animals.
Charles Kellogg of California has started out to convince the Harvard faculty of his ability to talk with animals. His life has been spent in the Sierra Nevada, and his studies include the vocal sounds made by bears, squirrels, lizards, rattlesnakes and crickets. Indeed, he claims proficiency in fifteen animal languages. He has a peculiar palate, with no tonsils, and entirely lacks the cord connecting the teeth with the lips. To these peculiarities he partly ascribes the ease with which he imitates the sounds of insects and animals. Some of his observations and ideas are, it is said, at least interesting, if not convincing.

Serious Omission.
The new millionaire's banquet table was spread, and the guests about to be summoned.
"Are you sure there are no reporters present?" anxiously asked the host of the buffet.
"I've made certain of it, sir."
"Then go out and get a few," rejoined the host.—Canadian Courier.

Their Rule.
"Doctors are the meanest class of men."
"What makes you say that?"
"When they treat a man, they make him pay for it."
